

Professional and Creative Communication - Honors Minor

Overview

The Minor in Professional and Creative Communication - Honors, offered by the Klein College of Media and Communication in collaboration with the Temple University Honors Program, consists of six courses (18 credit hours). The minor is designed to equip students from any major with the theoretical knowledge, creative skills, and applied experience needed to analyze, produce, and strategically deliver effective messages across diverse platforms.

The minor is structured in two tiers to scaffold learning from theory to practice. In the first tier, students complete four "Understanding Communication" courses that introduce core theoretical frameworks and key areas within the communication and media fields.

In the second tier, students select two "Creating Communication" courses that emphasize hands-on, experiential learning, allowing students to apply theory through activities such as podcasting, video production, and strategic communication campaigns.

After completion of the minor, students will be able to:

- analyze communication systems using disciplinary frameworks;
- evaluate how social, cultural, ethical and technological contexts shape communication processes;
- apply theory to real-world communication challenges across media; and,
- reflect critically on their own communication choices and responsibilities as ethical communicators.

Requirements

The minor is structured in two tiers:

- Tier 1: Understanding Communication (4 courses, 12 credits)
- Tier 2: Creating Communication (2 courses, 6 credits)

Honors students in any school or college at Temple University can declare this minor. Non-honors students can enroll in the minor via application on the Honors Program web site.

To earn this minor, students must successfully complete 18 credits (6 courses) with a minimum grade of C- in each course.

There are no prerequisites or required courses for this minor.

At least three courses (9 credits) required for the minor must be completed at Temple.

Note that:

- Courses must be taken from at least three different departments within Klein College of Media and Communication.
- Maximum of two non-Honors courses (6 credits) can be used to satisfy requirements for the minor (see definition of an Honors course).
- Honors students can use all Honors courses in this minor to count towards Honors Program requirements.
- For students completing majors or other programs within Klein College, at least three of the courses (9 credits) counted towards the minor must be courses that were not counted towards another Klein major, minor, or certificate.

- Because students majoring in Journalism may take no more than 62 credits in the Department of Journalism, they should consult with an academic advisor to develop a plan to complete this minor.

Tier 1: Understanding Communication (4 courses, 12 credits)
